

Linux Threads

`clone()` creates a separate process that shares the address space of the calling process. The cloned task behaves much like a separate thread.

