

Linux prefers paging to segmentation

Because

- ▶ Segmentation and paging are somewhat redundant
- ▶ Memory management is simpler when all processes share the same set of linear addresses
- ▶ Maximum portability. RISC architectures in particular have limited support for segmentation

The Linux 2.6 uses segmentation only when required by the 80x86 architecture.